In Prokocim Hospital: visiting the sick as a life decision

Yesterday afternoon the Pope visited the paediatric hospital of Prokocim, the largest in the south of Poland, which treats 30,000 young inpatients and a further 200,000 in outpatient clinics each year. During its fifty years of service the hospital has treated more than 900,000 patients and is a leader in certain fields such as the separation of Siamese twins, the treatment of burns and childhood heart disease. St. John Paul II, some of whose relics are conserved in the chapel, visited the hospital in 1991. The chaplaincy and pastoral care is provided by the Dehonian Fathers.

The Pope was received by the Polish prime minister and the director of the centre, and was awaited by around fifty young patients with their parents. He addressed the following words to them:

“A special part of my visit to Krakow is this meeting with the little patients of this hospital. I greet all of you and I thank the Prime Minister for her kind words. I would like to draw near to all children who are sick, to stand at their bedside, and embrace them. I would like to listen to everyone here, even if for only a moment, and to be still before questions that have no easy answers. And to pray.

“The Gospel often shows us the Lord Jesus meeting the sick, embracing them and seeking them out. Jesus is always attentive to them. He looks at them in the same way that a mother looks at her sick child, and He is moved by compassion for them.

“How I would wish that we Christians could be as close to the sick as Jesus was, in silence, with a caress, with prayer. Sadly, our society is tainted by the culture of waste, which is the opposite of the culture of acceptance. And the victims of the culture of waste are those who are weakest and most frail; and this is indeed cruel. How beautiful it is instead to see that in this hospital the smallest and most needy are welcomed and cared for. Thank you for this sign of love that you offer us! This is the sign of true civility, human and Christian: to make those who are most disadvantaged the centre of social and political concern.

“Sometimes families feel alone in providing this care. What can be done? From this place, so full of concrete signs of love, I would like to say: Let us multiply the works of the culture of acceptance, works inspired by Christian love, love for Jesus crucified, for the flesh of Christ. To serve with love and tenderness persons who need our help makes all of us grow in humanity. It opens before us the way to eternal life. Those who engage in works of mercy have no fear of death.

“I encourage all those who have made the Gospel call to ‘visit the sick’ a personal life decision: physicians, nurses, healthcare workers, chaplains and volunteers. May the Lord help you to do your work well, here as in every other hospital in the world. May He reward you by giving you inner peace and a heart always capable of tenderness.

“Thank you for this encounter! I carry you with me in affection and prayer. And please, do not forget to pray for me”.

Francis presented to the hospital a painting by the artist Piero Casentini, entitled “Before the door”, in which St. Peter faces a crowd of sick people who wish to enter the house where Christ can be glimpsed. He then visited the emergency room to speak with the children admitted there, and concluded his visit with prayer in the chapel.
